

Editorial

This Issue marks a number of milestones for The Economic and Labour Relations Review. For the first time in 2012, ELRR has been published in four issues per volume. This will continue into the future. From 2013, the journal will be published every March, June, September and December.

We are delighted to announce that from March 2013, ELRR will be published by SAGE Publications Ltd. This significant stage in our twenty-three year history follows hard on the heels of the journal's listing in indexes providing an impact factor.

This is the last of our in-house issues, produced with the highest levels of care, dedication and craft skill by our matchless Editorial Coordinator Jason Antony. Since 2007, readers may have noticed the continuous improvement in the production values of ELRR, which are attributable to the meticulous attention to accuracy and design that is Jason's passion. More likely, readers have not been conscious of this, because Jason's guiding philosophy has been to ensure that the aesthetic presentation of the journal is unobtrusive, allowing ideas to flow freely between author and reader. On behalf of the Editorial Committee, I wish to place on record our admiration for Jason's integrity, conscientiousness, patience and resourcefulness in dealing with every difficulty and meeting every challenge that has arisen.

After all these years, acknowledgement is also long overdue to Tony Anderson and David Kelley of Finline Print & Copy Service NSW, who have displayed the highest professionalism and met every deadline. It is a wrench to be saying farewell to these long-term friends.

Nevertheless we are looking forward with excitement to a new era in which the distinctive voice of The Economic and Labour Relations Review reaches an ever-growing readership, through the partnership with SAGE.

---

Anne Junor
Editor in Chief
For the Executive Editors and Editorial Committee