CONTRIBUTORS

Michael Allis is Senior Lecturer in Music at the University of Leeds. His publications include articles and book chapters on narrative in the music of Elgar, musical settings of Tennyson, studies of performance and reception in Victorian Britain, and the monograph Parry's Creative Process (2003). Current projects include an interdisciplinary study of British music and literature.

Suzanne Robinson teaches at the University of Melbourne, where she is an Honorary Research Fellow and Series Editor of Australasian Music Research. She is currently writing a biography of Australian-American composer Peggy Glanville-Hicks.

Klára Móricz is a former staff member of the Budapest Bartók Archives and is currently visiting Valentine Professor of Music at Amherst College. In 2008 the University of California Press published her book Jewish Identities: Nationalism, Racism, and Utopianism in Twentieth-Century Art Music. She is researching the life and works of Arthur Lourié and, with David Schneider, editing three volumes of anthologies to accompany the forthcoming Oxford History of Western Music.

Rhian Samuel is a composer and Professor of Music at City University London. Her latest CD, 'Light and Water' was issued last year on the Deux-Elles label.

Blake Stevens is Assistant Professor at the Dana School of Music, Youngstown State University. He received his PhD from Stanford University in 2007 with a dissertation on the monologue in French Baroque opera and dramaturgical thought ('Solitary Persuasions: The Concept of the Monologue in French Opera from Lully to Rameau').
