The author looks at the history of the law of nations in terms of the thinkers, expounders, and interpreters of international law. In his examination of the world of thought in international law, he follows the birth of concepts of law, their growth, the movements which fostered them, the influence on law-in-the-making and on law-in-action, and present and future trends. The book is unique as it discusses not only the major and many of the minor teachers of law and their impact, but also deals with the historical transmission of legal knowledge through the great schools and universities.

Contents

1. The role of teachings. 2. Deniers and Utopians. 3. The mainstream – a brief survey. 4. Transmission of knowledge. 5. The impact of teachings. 6. Concluding reflections. Bibliography. Documents – Reports. List of cases.

First published in 1968, this new edition of an annotated indexed collection of texts of documents relates to international organisation and integration. It covers the constantly developing UN system and the specialized agencies of that system and also the regional groupings all over the world. Many functional organizations and arrangements are also included, such as those relating to human rights, environment, and satellites in outer space. It is divided into two books of six volumes. Book I deals with organizations relating to the UN; Book II deals with other organizations and arrangements. Each organisation has an annotated Documents section and a descriptive Directory providing information on its structure, budget, activities, and a related bibliography.
