COVER: STEVENS WOOLEN MILL, c. 1870. This view of the warping department shows a mill located in Haverhill, Massachusetts, that was added to the family business in 1855. The man is probably the overseer. (Photograph courtesy of the Museum of American Textile History, North Andover.) For an archival essay on the business history holdings of the Museum of American Textile History, where the Stevens family papers are located, see pp. 641–650.

CONTRIBUTORS

MARTIN BROWN is assistant professor of economics at Howard University. He received his Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1981. He is the coauthor, with Peter Philips, of "The Evolution of Labor Market Structure: The Case of California Canning," Industrial and Labor Relations Review (1985) and has applied the historical approach to labor economics in several other industry case studies.

SANFORD M. JACOBY is associate professor of industrial relations at the UCLA Graduate School of Management. He received his Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Berkeley. His publications include Employing Bureaucracy: Managers, Unions, and the Transformation of Work in American Industry, 1900–1945 (1985), which received the George R. Terry Book Award from the Academy of Management. He is presently conducting a historical study of employee associations and independent unions.

PETER PHILIPS is assistant professor of economics at the University of Utah. He received his Ph.D. in economics from Stanford University in 1980. He has written, with Martin Brown, several studies that place wage structure and labor markets in historical context, including "Craft Labor and Mechanization in Nineteenth-Century American Canning," Journal of Economic History (1986).

DOROTHY TRUMAN is manuscript specialist and archivist at the Museum of American Textile History in North Andover, Massachusetts. She received a B.A. from Wellesley, an M.A. in European History from Columbia University, and has studied archival theory and management at the University of Massachusetts, Boston. She is a coauthor of The Merrimack Valley Textile Museum: A Guide to the Manuscript Collections (1983).

RICHARD H. K. VIETOR is professor of business administration at the Harvard Business School. He has written numerous articles on the history of American energy policy, and he is the author of Environmental Politics and the Coal Coalition (1980) and Energy Policy in America since 1945 (1984).

WHITNEY WALTON is assistant professor of history at Oakland University. She received her Ph.D. in 1983 from the University of Wisconsin, Madison. She has studied women workers in nineteenth-century French Lorraine and is currently analyzing bourgeois views of industrialization in France as represented by French participation in the Crystal Palace Exhibition of 1851.
