Illegal Drugs, Economy, and Society in the Andes

Francisco E. Thoumi

Some countries develop illegal drugs industries, and others do not. Discerning the distinguishing characteristics—social, economic, and political—of countries with these industries forms the subject of this sophisticated and humane study. The author, Francisco Thoumi, though trained as an economist, rejects simplistic economic solutions as well as simplistic moral ones as he addresses the Andean countries of Peru, Colombia, and Bolivia and the attitudes and responses of the United States.

Democracy in Latin America, 1760-1900

Volume 1, Civic Selfhood and Public Life in Mexico and Peru

CARLOS A. FORMENT

"Carlos Forment probably knows more than anyone in the world about associational life in nineteenth-century Latin America. In this tirelessly researched and densely argued volume, he provides a better explanation than any I have read of why vibrant civil societies did not produce strong or stable democratic states."

—MICHAEL WALZER, Institute for Advanced Study

The Spacious Word

Cartography, Literature, and Empire in Early Modern Spain

RICARDO PADRÓN

"An intelligent and wholly original volume. Ricardo Padrón opens up new debates about cartography and empire in the Spanish and New World during the sixteenth century. His focus, unlike most scholars, is less upon maps per se than on the concept of space as it appears in the literature, poems, and cartographic writings of the early modern period. This is an important and elegantly written work."
