Transnational Corporations versus the State

The Political Economy of the Mexican Auto Industry

Douglas C. Bennett and Kenneth E. Sharpe

Between 1959 and the early 1980s, Mexico three times engaged in important bargaining conflicts with seven transnational automobile companies active in the country's rapidly growing automobile industry. Recognizing the state as more than a passive participant in the dependency process, the authors use a historical-structural method to probe not only the progress of the Mexican auto industry from simple assembly to domestic manufacture to export, but also the impact of transnational corporations on Mexico's industrialization, and Mexico's power to modify that impact — within limits — by bargaining. What emerges is a major theoretical contribution to debates on dependency relations between TNCs and the state.

The Palace of Charles V in Granada

Earl Rosenthal

Like Earl Rosenthal's earlier book, The Cathedral of Granada (Princeton, 1961), this work is a comprehensive study of an important Spanish architectural monument. The palace of Charles V in Granada is the first realization of an ideal Italian type (the block-design residence with a porticoed round courtyard) and the first High Renaissance palace outside Italy. Describing the design, construction history, and sources of the building, Professor Rosenthal analyzes a conflict of two architectural traditions: the Italian view was represented by Luis Hurtado de Mendoza, to whom Charles entrusted the design in 1526, and by his Italian-trained architect Pedro Machuca, while the Castilian was expressed by court architects consulted by Charles. 173 halftones. 8½ x 11". $77.50

Cantares Mexicanos

Songs of the Aztecs

Translated from the Nahuatl, with an Introduction and Commentary, by John Bierhorst. Since its rediscovery in the 19th century, the codex Cantares Mexicanos has come to be recognized as the chief source of Aztec poetry and one of the monuments of American Indian literature. Here translated in its entirety for the first time, the text is accompanied by an extensive Introduction and a detailed commentary on each of the 91 songs. The songs are presented in a paleographic text of the original Nahuatl with facing English translations. Compiled by native scribes in the late 16th century, and preserving almost all known examples of Aztec music notation, the Cantares reenact battles, describe the effects of the Spanish Conquest, touch on Christian subjects, and even deal with transvestite and homosexual themes. $45.00

A Nahuatl-English Dictionary and Concordance to the Cantares Mexicanos

With an Analytic Transcription and Grammatical Notes

John Bierhorst. Based on the codex Cantares Mexicanos, this is essentially a companion volume to the author's translation of that work. The dictionary provides a virtually complete glossary of 16th-century Aztec poetic usage, including many definitions not found in the standard dictionaries of Molina and Siméon. Except for work in the field of poetry, where it can stand as a reference of first resort, the dictionary should be regarded as a supplement to Molina and Siméon. The concordance, together with the analytic transcription, enables one to trace each word, its cognates, and its synonyms throughout the Cantares. The volume also includes a skeleton grammar and a special concordance to Cantares vocables, or nonsense syllables. $65.00

The Women of Mexico City, 1790-1857

Silvia Marina Arrom. This pioneering study challenges the traditional view of 19th-century Latin American women as passive, powerless beings, absorbed in familial duties, confined to the home, and totally subordinated to men. Drawing upon sources largely ignored by historians of Latin America, the author examines the lives of the women of Mexico City during the long transition from colonial rule to the Juarez period. Her findings demonstrate that if independence did not bring the promised profound changes in women's lives, it did result in significant improvements in their status under the law, in their educational opportunities, and in their position within the family. A special feature of the book is the attempt, wherever possible, to document the lives of lower-class women. Illus. $39.50

The Potosí Mita, 1573-1700 Compulsory Indian Labor in the Andes

Jeffrey A. Cole. Potosí was for over a century the most important source of silver in the Spanish American Empire. It owed much of its success to the mita, a system of draft Indian labor for working the mines and refineries. Assailed as a form of servitude worse than slavery and accused of depopulating the provinces subject to it, the mita was supported, however reluctantly, by many who believed that Potosí silver was essential for Spain's survival. This book traces the evolution of the mita through the end of the Hapsburg epoch, focusing on its metamorphosis under pressures of changing production at Potosí and demographic developments in the provinces. It also considers the factors that hindered the Hapsburg government's effective administration of the mita. $29.50

The Cambridge History of Latin America

Volume III: From Independence to c.1870

Edited by LESLIE BETHELL

Volume III opens with five chapters which survey the revolutions and wars of independence in Spanish America and the relatively peaceful transition to independence in Brazil. Part Two is devoted to the Caribbean, while Parts Three and Four concentrate on the economic, social and political history of Latin America during the first half-century after independence. £55.00 net

Latin America and the World Recession

Edited by ESPERANZA DURAN

The aim of this collection of essays is to provide the political and economic background to the debt crisis in Latin America. It examines the external and internal causes that led many Latin American countries to contract huge debts and the effect of world recession on their inability to pay. Finally, the book considers the consequences for the future development of Latin America and its relations with the industrialised world. £22.50 net

Tales of the Yanomami

Daily Life in the Venezuelan Forest

JACQUES LIZOT

Translated by ERNEST SIMON

The Yanomami Indians of the Venezuelan Forest are to some extent known already to the outside world through the books that have been written, and the films that have been made about them. In this book, Jacques Lizot allows the Indians to speak for themselves. The result is a rich, evocative and intimate account of the way in which they perceive, and feel about their world.

The Province of Buenos Aires and Argentine Politics, 1912-1943

RICHARD J. WALTER

As Argentina's largest, wealthiest and most populous province, Buenos Aires has long been the key prize in all major electoral struggles. This first account of its political history between 1912 and 1943 underscores its role as a vital factor in national presidential elections, the relationship between provincial administrations and the national government, and the struggle between the two principal political parties which vied for control of the province during the early part of the century. £25.00 net

STATE AND OPPOSITION IN MILITARY BRAZIL

By MARIA HELENA MOREIRA ALVES

This incisive study analyzes politically and historically the relationship between civil society and government structures in Brazil since the military takeover in 1964. Based on extensive research into opposition and government documents and on more than one hundred interviews with key figures in government, the military, the church, and other groups, the book provides a rich description of the tortuous attempt to create a workable "national security state" in the face of determined opposition. $22.50 hardcover

AGRARIAN WARLORD

Saturnino Cedillo and the Mexican Revolution in San Luis Potosí

Dudley Ankerson

Agrarian Warlord is the first comprehensive biography of Mexico's last rural caudillo. Examining Cedillo's life within its context—from his early activity as a guerrilla chief under the banner of agrarian reform, through his role as power broker between the local peasantry and the authorities in Mexico City, to his later consolidation of political power as one of Mexico's most powerful warlords—Ankerson shows the peasantry to be both instrument and victim of the Revolution.

Latin American Oil Companies and the Politics of Energy

Edited by John D. Wirth

At different times and for different reasons Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and Venezuela have nationalized their petroleum resources and industries, thereby developing a uniquely Latin American style and approach. The national case studies and the early history of the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) in this volume portray the vicissitudes in relations between the large international oil companies and proponents of nationalist development, including the Latin American private sector. The authors analyze weaknesses in state enterprise, such as overlapping goals and short-term political interference, while also showing how the historical evolution of the giant public companies has made them indispensable features of the political economy of Latin America.

NOTES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

Journal of Latin American Studies is published twice a year under the academic sponsorship of the Centres or Institutes of Latin American Studies at the University of Cambridge, Essex, Glasgow, Liverpool, London and Oxford.

The scope of the journal is the study of Latin America from the standpoint of the social sciences, including anthropology, archaeology, economics, geography, history, international relations, politics, sociology, etc., though it is not concerned with linguistic or literary studies.

Editorial policy avoids commitment to any political viewpoint or ideology, but welcomes free discussion of such issues in the Latin American context, on the understanding that all responsibility for opinions expressed rests exclusively with the author concerned and not with either the journal or its editors.

Contributions are invited from all parts of the world. Articles should generally not be more than 8,000 words long, and two copies, typed with double-spacing, should be submitted. Diagrams and maps may be included by arrangement with the editors. The journal is published in English, but articles written in other languages may be considered, and arrangements made as required for translation into English. Contributors should keep one copy of the typescript for use in correcting proofs.

All contributions and editorial correspondence should be addressed to Journal of Latin American Studies, Institute of Latin American Studies, 31 Tavistock Square, London, WC1H 9HA.

Each contributor will receive, free of charge, 25 offprints of the article and a copy of the issue of the journal in which it appears.
