Three important aids for research on . . .

(1) how the American public tries to solve its legal problems, (2) how it utilizes the services of lawyers and in what areas, and (3) how satisfied (or dissatisfied) it is with the delivery of legal services.

The Legal Needs of the Public: The Final Report of a National Survey

by Barbara A. Curran

This first comprehensive survey of legal needs addresses the questions: To what extent do people have problems for which legal services may be useful? What is the extent of use and nonuse of lawyers? What is the nature of the use? What kinds of lawyers are sought? How are they chosen? What is the public's reaction to legal costs? What are the attitudes of the public toward lawyers and toward the legal system generally? These and many other questions are examined not only for the public at large but also for various demographic subgroups based on age, race, sex, education, income, occupation, and combinations of these factors. The results reported are based on statistical analyses of data obtained in one-to-two-hour personal interviews with each of 2,064 Americans scientifically sampled to represent the experiences and opinions of the adult population.

Data Manual for the Survey of the Legal Needs of the Public

by Barbara A. Curran and Katherine J. Rosich

The Data Manual provides complete information about the nature of the answers of the 2,064 respondents to the survey of the legal needs of the public. Each answer to the survey was coded and transferred from the questionnaires to magnetic computer tape. The Data Manual will be of particular interest to individuals and groups who are interested in conducting further analysis of these data.
