

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

JAMES J. ALIBRIO is Director of Research and Statistics for the Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole. He graduated from Wesleyan University and received an M.A. from the University of Pittsburgh. His major interests are applied research for program development and creation of explicit policy guidelines for decision making.

JOHN S. CARROLL is Associate Professor in the Applied Social Psychology Program at Loyola University of Chicago. He received his Ph.D. in Social Psychology from Harvard in 1963. Attribution theory is his major research interest.

DAN COATES is Assistant Professor of Psychology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He received his Ph.D. from Northwestern and has published a number of essays on the social and emotional consequences of victimization.

SHARI SEIDMAN DIAMOND is Associate Professor of Psychology and Criminal Justice at the University of Illinois in Chicago. She is the author of articles on jury behavior, judicial sentencing, and methodological problems in the study of law. She is currently conducting research on the decision making behavior of lay and lawyer judges.

JOLENE GALEGHER is a doctoral student in social psychology at Northwestern University and a Research Associate at Loyola University of Chicago. Her research has focused on causal reasoning processes in parole and sentencing decisions.

MARTIN S. GREENBERG is an Associate Professor of Psychology at the University of Pittsburgh. He received his Ph.D. in social psychology from the University of Houston and has taught at the University of Michigan and Washington University in St. Louis. He is co-author of Social Psychology of the Criminal Justice System (1982). His research interests include social cognition and decision making by crime victims.

BENJAMIN KLEINMUNTZ is Professor of Psychology at the University of Illinois at Chicago. He received his Ph.D. in 1958 from the University of Minnesota. His interests have centered on the study of human error in a variety of problem-solving enterprises. His books include Essentials of Abnormal Psychology, Personality and Psychological Assessment, and Formal Representation of Human Judgment.

ELIZABETH F. LOFTUS is Professor of Psychology at the University of Washington (Seattle). She is author of eight books, including Eyewitness Testimony (1979), and numerous papers. Her current research interests include eyewitness testimony, memory, and jury instructions.

ANNE W. MARTIN is a decision analyst at Decision and Designs, Inc. in McLean, Va. She received her Ph.D. in 1981 from Rice University in Psychology and Mathematical Sciences.

R. BARRY RUBACK is an Assistant Professor of Psychology at Georgia State University. He received his J.D. degree from the University of Texas and his Ph.D. degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He is a member of the State Bar Associations of Georgia and Texas and is the co-author of Social Psychology of the Criminal Justice System (1982). His research focuses on decision making by victims of crime.

DAVID SCHUM is a Professor of Psychology at Rice University, currently on leave and working at the Central Intelligence Agency. He received his Ph.D. from Ohio State University in 1964, and he is the co-author of Introduction to Applied Probability (1976).

LAURENCE SEVERANCE is a Research Associate at the University of Washington in Seattle and a Staff Attorney with the Seattle-King County Public Defender Association. His current research interests include jury instructions and strategies for preventing juvenile delinquency.

JULIAN J. SZUCKO is a University of Illinois Ph.D. (1982). He is working at present as a psychologist with the Testing Service unit of the Student Counseling Service at the University of Illinois, Chicago Campus. His current research interests include polygraphic lie detection testing and automated interpretation of psychological tests.

TOM R. TYLER is an Assistant Professor of Psychology at Northwestern University. He received his Ph.D. from U.C.L.A. in 1978. His current research interests include social cognition, political psychology, and psychology of the law.

RENEE WEBER is a graduate student in Psychology at Northwestern University. Her research interests include cognitive processes, stereotyping, and the development and change of political and social attitudes.

RICHARD L. WIENER is Assistant Professor of Psychology at Saint Louis University. He received his Ph.D. in Social Psychology from the University of Houston in 1980. He is interested in the application of decision theory and program evaluation principles to the study of psychology and the law. His research interests also include attribution theory and social cognition.

DAVID R. WESTCOTT is a graduate student in the Personality and Social Psychology Program at the University of Pittsburgh. He is interested in various aspects of the criminal justice system as it relates to social psychology. He has co-authored several papers on victim decision making and eyewitness identification.