Toward an Analysis of Discourse

The English Used by Teachers and Pupils

John McH. Sinclair and R. M. Coulthard

The analysis of connected discourse, and especially the language which takes place when people talk to each other, is a subject of growing interest for linguists. Based on important work by a research team at Birmingham, this book reviews the whole field of discourse analysis and then uses samples of classroom language to evolve a general system of analysis. A final chapter discusses the implications of this system, in the light of continuing research. Paper covers £1.50 forthcoming

Semantic Syntax

Edited by Pieter A. M. Seuren

The aim of this collection of articles is to provide an insight into certain live issues of linguistic theory which seem crucial to our understanding of the phenomenon 'human language'. Two problem areas have been singled out: the nature and grammatical status of lexical items, and the relation between linguistic structure and classical predicate calculus, especially the status of logical operators in natural language. Paper covers £1.20 Oxford Readings in Philosophy

The Edinburgh Course in Applied Linguistics

Edited by J. P. B. Allen and S. Pit Corder

This integrated series of four textbooks for students of applied linguistics has been prepared by members of the Department of Linguistics in the University of Edinburgh. All the material has been selected, developed, and tested in the Department's teaching.

Book 1: Readings in Applied Linguistics
£4.75 Paper covers £2.80

Book 3: Techniques in Applied Linguistics
£5.50 Paper covers £3.50

Book 2, Papers in Applied Linguistics, and Book 4, Experiments in Testing, are forthcoming.

Inspection copies of these books are available to lecturers wishing to consider them for adoption as required texts. Please write to the Oxford University Press (UPS), Ely House, 37 Dover Street, London W1X 4AH.

I. A. Richards

Essays in His Honor

Edited by Reuben Brower, Helen Vendler, and John Hollander

I. A. Richards is generally regarded as one of the founders of modern literary criticism. This unusual Festschrift contains poems; an interview with Richards himself; and essays which reflect among other interests the active part he has played in the Coleridgean study of literature and language, and in the development of psychology, philosophy, and basic English. Illustrated £5.75 OUP New York

British Social Anthropologists and Language

A History of Separate Development

Hilary Henson

Recent social anthropology has produced much interesting work on meaning and ways of thinking that can be shown to be associated with a general interest in language and linguistics. British contributions in this field have, however, been sparse, for the British school have never shared the close association with linguistics that is found in America and France. With few important exceptions British social anthropologists have largely avoided the implications of language in their work. £3 Oxford Monographs on Social Anthropology

The Development of Modern Rumanian

Linguistic Theory and Practice in Muntenia 1821–1838

Elizabeth Close

In the 1820s and 1830s a circle of gifted young writers in Bucharest, led by Ion Eliade Radulescu, laid the foundations of the literary Rumanian of today. Their achievements have been largely neglected, their works having never before received the close linguistic analysis which they deserve. The author describes and evaluates their theories concerning the enrichment of the lexical and structural resources of Rumanian, and the ways in which they applied them in their original works and their translations. £7 Oxford Modern Language and Literature Monographs

The Dumb Linguists

A Study of the Earliest English and Dutch Dictionaries

N. E. Osselton

The first English/Dutch dictionaries reflect in their vocabulary, as in their origins, the changing and various contacts that existed between the two countries in the early modern period. £4 Leiden University Press

Second-Language Learning and Teaching

D. A. WILKINS

David Wilkins has written this book for foreign-language teachers and teachers in training, in an attempt to establish some basic methodological principles of language teaching. The theme underlying the book is that, before choosing a teaching method, it is essential that the teacher understand the particular situation he finds himself in: the characteristics of his pupils, the level and kind of proficiency at which they are aiming, and the teaching resources at his disposal.

Linguistics in Language Teaching

D. A. WILKINS

'This excellently planned and presented work is written essentially for the language teacher who, though he may have some interest in linguistics, is above all concerned with the practical task of imparting fresh knowledge and fresh skills to his pupils. Linguistic theories are treated succinctly, and at the same time the author never loses sight of the day-to-day problems of instruction.'

The Linguist and the English Language

RANDOLPH QUIRK

In this collection of essays Professor Quirk has turned his attention to the scope of linguistic investigations of English, both spoken and written. Two important essays, 'The Language of "Language and Literature"' and 'The Study of the Mother Tongue', explore the potential, both practical and scholarly, of linguistic studies of the mother tongue.

'Most of the chapters are a delight of information and anecdote; all are pleasant to read. They add up to an account of the field as seen through the eyes of one of the major and most rewarding activists and contributors to it.'

What is Linguistics?

Third Edition

DAVID CRYSTAL

In this new edition of his popular introduction to linguistics, Dr Crystal has provided for the rapid growth of interest in the subject by updating details of courses in British universities and adding to his list for suggested reading.

'Linguistics is a vogue word, and many people will welcome a lucid account of it. This book will give them what they want in a short time.'

English Language Teaching (of the First Edition)

'... the book is a necessity for careers masters and mistresses and for language teachers.'

LATIN: AN INTENSIVE COURSE

Floyd L. Moreland and Rita M. Fleischer

Originally written for the Latin Workshop at Berkeley and the Summer Latin Institute of Brooklyn College, the book, which includes all the major grammatical constructions, is arranged in eighteen units; each unit may be covered in one day for intensive courses or may be spread out over a week of regular classes. It is designed to provide the student with the forms needed to read real Latin as soon as possible; for example, the subjunctive is introduced in the second unit, and the entire verbal system is covered in the early parts of the book.

ALPHABETIC AND PHONEMIC TEXTS OF INFORMAL SPEECH WITH STATISTICAL ANALYSIS

Edward C. Carterette and Margaret Hubbard Jones

It has long been known that informal spoken language is significantly different from written language. The extent of the difference, however, has never been fully appreciated because of the lack of information on the spoken language. The present work attempts to fill this gap by providing a careful description and quantification of 'standard' spoken language. Presented here are the running dialogs of peer groups of persons in free discussions, ranging in age from first-grade schoolchildren to adults, together with a variety of statistical descriptions taken from these texts. The authors draw several important conclusions from their analysis, in particular that the speech of six-year old children is virtually adult speech, implying that basic language learning is complete before school is begun.

Language in Thought and Action

Third Edition

S. I. HAYAKAWA

The third edition of this book, like its predecessors, is a study of the principles of semantics, which aims to help the reader to understand how language works and how that understanding can be used in everyday life. References and examples have been brought up to date in this edition, and a major revision of the 'Applications', semantic exercises at the end of each chapter, has been made. Several semantic cartoons have been included to enliven the book.

THE LINGUISTICS ASSOCIATION

The Linguistics Association of Great Britain was founded in 1959 to promote the study of linguistics and to provide for its members both a forum for discussion and facilities for co-operation in furtherance of their interest in linguistics. The Association meets twice yearly at different places; original papers are presented and special topics are discussed at symposia and colloquia.

Persons interested in linguistics are eligible for election as members, subject to the approval of the Committee. Subscribing members receive the Journal of Linguistics without further payment. Particulars of the Linguistics Association and application forms for membership may be had from the Honorary Secretary, Mr C. S. Butler, Department of English Studies, University of Nottingham, University Park, Nottingham NG7 2RD

AUTUMN MEETING 1974

No Autumn Meeting of the Association was held.

SPRING MEETING 1975

The Spring Meeting of the Association will be held at the University of Nottingham April 6-8 1975. The Annual Meeting of the Societas Linguistica Europaea will also be held in Nottingham at this time, and participants will be free to attend papers given at either conference. Professor

A. Martinet has kindly agreed to deliver the opening lecture at a joint session of the two associations.
