MAKING SENSE OF TEACHING GERMAN

Deutsch Heute

Duncan Sidwell and Penny Capooore

Introducing a complete graded German course leading to public examination at 16+

Recently there has been an urgent need in schools for material offering a more functional and practical approach to the teaching and learning of German, enabling students to communicate in German from the outset. The many schemes of graded assessment throughout the country indicate how much the shifting emphasis is called for by teachers.

Deutsch Heute New! August £3.95

This book, the first of three Students' Books, enables students to seek and give information verbally, to perform the simple transactions in public places; to express needs and preferences; to write a simple letter; to perform the simple courtesies; and to understand certain types of written information.

Other materials for Level 1 include a tape, a cassette and flashcards.

Educational Publishing At Its Best

Nelson are renowned for the thoroughness of their approach to educational publishing.

The aim is to produce high interest, balanced teaching programmes which teachers can rely on. They must therefore be based on sound theory with a practical application; and, to this end all Nelson material is extensively trialled.

Nelson welcome the advent of modern technologies to teaching, for they are uniquely equipped to make the most of the new opportunities which such advances offer.

Proud of their successes to date, Nelson invite you to share the future with them — confidently.

Making Sense Of Teaching French

Recent developments in language teaching have demonstrated the need for a graded French course which is more practically based.

Action! Graded French is just that. It is now widely used and takes students up to CSE, O-level and the 16+ exam, developing their confidence in the required skills — listening, reading, speaking and writing.

Action! Graded French will help those of all abilities to acquire language skills with a sound grammatical base. Students will be able to cope positively with the following situations:

- ★ Dealing with the business of everyday life in a foreign country and helping visitors to this country to do the same.
- ★ Exchanging information and ideas with a variety of French-speaking people and communicating their thoughts and feelings.
- ★ Achieving a wider and deeper understanding of the way of life and forms of thought of other peoples.

Teachers acclaim Action! Graded French a positive success in French language teaching.
