

Oscar Cullmann

The Christology of the New Testament

Dr Cullmann takes each of the New Testament titles of Christ, and examines what they meant to the world to which Jesus came, whether in orthodox Judaism, in circles like those of Qumran, or in the Hellenistic world. He goes on to investigate how much we can know of Jesus' own attitude to, and use of, each title. Finally, he discusses the way each of these concepts shaped, and was shaped by, the thinking of the early Church. His conclusion is that New Testament Christology does not date from the experience of the early Church, but goes back to the life and 'self-consciousness' of Jesus himself.

Paul and the Salvation of Mankind

In this book a distinguished Danish scholar, Professor at Aarhus University, subjects to a radical re-examination the assumptions on which Pauline studies have largely been built for over a century—assumptions that go back to F. C. Baur and the Tübingen School. He seeks to show that Paul was not the universalist standing over against Jerusalem's particularism. He does not believe that there was any Judaizing party in Jerusalem. Looking at Paul's missionary strategy Professor Munck believes that he sought, by winning the first-fruits of every nation for Christ, to achieve the fullness of the Gentiles in this representative sense.

CHRISTENDOM

A Survey of all the Christian Churches throughout the World, their Doctrines, Constitutional Forms, and Ways of Worship

EINAR MOLLAND, Dr Theol. (Oslo), Hon. D.D. (Durham)

Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oslo

This important book will meet a real need. It is a surprising fact that no reliable and comprehensive source-book of information about all the different Christian Churches and Denominations at present exists in the English language, in spite of much current discussion on the subject of Reunion.

All branches of the Christian Faith are fully covered, in matters of belief and worship, constitutional systems, and statistical data: every Communion is represented, the Orthodox, the Roman Catholic, the Old Catholic, and the Anglican; the world-wide Protestant Churches, Lutheran, Methodist, Congregationalist, and Baptist; and not only does the book include offshoots like the Plymouth Brethren, the Moravians, the Adventists, but religious systems containing elements derived from Christianity like Unitarianism, Jehovah's Witnesses, and Mormonism. This is not only a book for libraries, but for clergy and lay people generally interested in the wider implications of Christianity.

Professor Molland has brought to the preparation of this volume not only the mind and methods of a trained historian, but the sympathy and understanding of a convinced Christian, deeply concerned in the work of the Ecumenical Movement. Cloth, 35s.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND MODERN THOUGHT

An Enquiry into the Historical, Theological, and Psychological aspects of the Christian Doctrine of the Holy Spirit

LINDSAY DEWAR, M.A., B.D.

Rector of Much Hadham, Herts.; Hon. Canon of St Albans

In this comprehensive study the author, who is well known as an authority and writer on moral theology, brings home the centrality of the Doctrine in Biblical and Patristic theology. Beginning with the Old Testament teaching on the Spirit of God, he shows the gradual unfolding of the Doctrine through the experience and meditations of the New Testament writers and the Fathers. In a concluding section on the 'Psychological Interpretation', he makes a significant and original contribution to the understanding of the healing ministry, by showing how the Holy Spirit, working on the natural level, assists the psychiatrist and his patient, and what the operation of the Unconscious, Clairvoyance, and Telepathy owe to the Spirit. Cloth, 25s.
