

CPD Online

359 New from CPD Online

Cochrane Corner

360 Risperidone for psychosis-induced aggression or agitation (rapid tranquilisation)

Edoardo G. Ostinelli, Mohsin Hussein, Uzair Ahmed, Faiz-ur Rehman, Krista Miramontes & Clive E. Adams

Round the Corner

361 Janssen in China and insights in treating schizophrenia

John Cookson

Articles

366 Boundary violations in therapy: the patient's experience of harm

John Hook & Dawn Devereux

374 Sexual boundary violations: victims, perpetrators and risk reduction

John Hook & Dawn Devereux

Commentary

384 Explanatory paradigms for professional boundary violations

Gwen Adshead

Article

386 Sexual rights, mental disorder and intellectual disability: practical implications for policy makers and practitioners

Helen Dewson, Keith J. B. Rix, Isabelle Le Gallez & Kartina A. Choong

Clinical Reflection

398 An ethical relationship with pharma

Sarmishtha Bhattacharyya & Susan Mary Benbow

Articles

402 Horses for courses: choosing an evidence-based psychological therapy for your patient

David McCormack & Trudie Chalder

412 Funding approaches for mental health services: is there still a role for clustering?

Rowena Jacobs, Martin Chalkley, María José Aragón, Jan R. Böhnke, Michael Clark & Valerie Moran

422 Biomarkers and the diagnosis of preclinical dementia

Philippa Lilford & Julian C. Hughes

Cover image

In the first of two articles, authors Hook & Devereux define harm in the therapeutic context, discuss its prevalence and then focus on the adverse effects that may arise when a patient transfers idealising feelings onto the professional.

In the second article, the authors explain that the subject of sexual boundary violations by healthcare professionals has largely been ignored in the UK. They argue that it is timely for all professions working with vulnerable people to take the problem seriously, to provide appropriate services for victims, evaluation and assessment of perpetrators, and sanctions that fit the crime in order to regain public trust.

Cover image: © iStockphoto/Jaaske