REVIEW OF RELIGION AND AMERICAN POWER

American Report examines the moral issues of war, peace, and social justice raised by the misuse of American power at home and abroad—

- American power at war in Indochina: the bombing of villages . . . the illusion of withdrawal . . . biological, electronic, and automated warfare.
- American power in the developing world: investments in southern Africa . . . emergence of Bangla Desh . . . military support for Brazil and Greece . . . Struggle to build new societies in Cuba, Chile, and China.
- American power here at home: racism . . . Kent State . . . Nixonomics . . . the press . . . corporations . . . Congress . . . poverty . . . farmworkers . . . draft resistance . . . the Pentagon.
- American power and the religious community: theology of liberation . . . Clergy and Laymen Concerned . . . Latin American priests . . . churches and synagogues offering sanctuary to resisters . . . church investments . . . the religious establishment . . . local struggles for justice and peace

As the first national newspaper of responsible dissent, in the form of a weekly tabloid, American Report explores the real relationship between American power and the moral imperatives of a truly free and equal society.

Our own independent worldwide news sources provide factual reporting and insightful commentary, often at great risk and in the face of official silence: courageous investigative journalism.

"American Report is the best way I know to reassure my friends in Latin America as to the American people and the system in which they live. Your magazine is among the finest examples of responsible dissent." Ivan Illich

"It does provide in one place more material than I find elsewhere on the war in Indochina, other foreign policy issues that are related to the war, what is happening in other Asian countries, and ecumenical responses to this complex of issues." John C. Bennett

"To me the valuable thing about American Report is that it gives 'the other side of the news —that is to say, the side that seldom gets published.'" Robert McAfee Brown

"For all the news that's fit to print—check out The New York Times. What's more important is to be a regular reader of one of the few papers fit to print the news, that's American Report!" Dick Gregory
