Computers Arrive on Wall Street, 1959

Cover: IBM 705 computers being delivered to Wall Street in 1959. While some brokerage firms purchased computers in the early and mid-1960s, most continued to rely on legions of clerks to process daily transactions. When trading volume increased sharply from 1965 to 1968, many firms found themselves with a paperwork crisis on their hands. See pp. 193–235. Contributors

Sébastien Guex is an assistant professor of contemporary history at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. He is a member of the board of the Société Suisse d'histoire économique et sociale and coeditor of the journal Traverse: Revue d'Histoire. His publications include La politique monétaire et financière de la Confédération suisse 1900–1920 (1993); “The Development of Swiss Trading Companies in the Twentieth Century” in Geoffrey Jones, ed., The Multinational Traders (1998); L'argent de l'Etat: Parcours des finances publiques au 20e siècle (1998); and Switzerland and the Great Powers 1914–1945: Economic Relations with the United States, Great Britain, Germany and France (1999). His current research includes Swiss economic history in the twentieth century, financial globalization, and the history of sports.

Jesús M. Valdaliso is a lecturer of economic history at the Universidad del País Vasco in Bilbao, Spain. He is the author of two books on Spanish shipping and several articles, including publications in the International Journal of Maritime History, the Journal of Transport History, Revista de Historia Económica, and Revista de Historia Industrial. His most recent work, co-written with Santiago López, focuses on business history and includes Historia económica de la empresa (2000) and “The Microfoundations of Competitiveness of Nations: An Evolutionary Approach for Business History,” in Anthony Slaven, ed., Business History, Theory and Practice (2000). He is currently working on a history of a large Spanish shipping group under the Franco dictatorship.

Wyatt Wells is an associate professor of history at Auburn University Montgomery, where he has an appointment as a Distinguished Research Professor. He is author of Economist in an Uncertain World: Arthur F. Burns and the Federal Reserve, 1970–1978 (1994), which examined the activities of the head of the central bank during the economically turbulent 1970s. Currently he is completing a manuscript entitled Exporting Antitrust: Cartels, Competition, and American Foreign Policy, 1938–1955, which studies the U.S. attempt to impose its antitrust tradition on the rest of the world, a policy with long-term implications for the international economy.
